Project Management Institute. Pune-Deccan India

CHAPTER ARTICLE BRIEF

Project skills in action: the Paani Foundation drive

Original publication: 2019-09-05 | Social impact

Abstract

The chapter’s account of its work with Paani Foundation describes volunteers contributing to watershed development in rural Maharashtra. It explains how a structured, agile approach helped organise the activity through defined roles, planned work and coordinated participation. The article links professional project management practices with hands-on service and longer-term benefits for local communities.

Key highlights

- The initiative brought chapter volunteers together with Paani Foundation.
- Watershed work addressed rainwater storage and rural water needs.
- Defined roles, planned sprints and coordination connected agile practice with field activity.
- The article illustrates how professional skills can support community service.

This PDF is a concise article brief prepared from the chapter’s published account. The original article remains available through the source link.

Read the original chapter article:

https://pmipunechapter.com/csr/paani-foundation-drive/